

You borrowed your brother's new shirt and got ink on it. He is really mad when he sees it lying on your floor. You toss it to him and tell him sorry, but it's not really a big deal and he needs to get over it.

You walk up to the theater to buy your movie tickets. You didn't notice someone was waiting before you until they say "Excuse me". You apologize and step aside so they can buy their tickets for the movie first.

You just started driving and pull up to a four way stop. It's not your turn to go, but you are in a hurry. You just beep your horn and wave, yelling "sorry" out the window as you drive through the intersection, almost causing an accident.

You are working on a group project for science class. You were supposed to make the PowerPoint last night, but you didn't get home until after ten pm. You apologize to the other people in the group and promise to finish over lunch so that the project will be turned in on time.

You promised your mom that you would babysit your little brother Saturday night. Then you got invited to a party you really wanted to go to. You forgot to tell your mom until Saturday afternoon and she was really upset. You just shrugged, said “sorry” and told her to find another babysitter.

You are at your locker and accidentally drop a book on the boy at the locker below yours. You ask him if he is okay and tell him how very sorry you are! You promise to be more careful and offer to let him get his books out of his locker first from now on.

Your little sister is really having a hard time in math. She asks if you can help her study this evening and you say sure. You end up working late and she was already in bed when you got home. In the morning, you apologize for missing the study session and offer to help her after school.

You were just trying to be nice to your friend’s new boyfriend, but she thought you were flirting with him. She is so mad, she doesn’t want to talk to you at all. You send her a text saying, “sorry, but it’s no big deal!” with fifteen sad face emojis after that. You don’t get a response.

Your boss was expecting you to be at work at 9am but you didn't wake up until 11am. When you get to work, you laugh, say "sorry" and make a joke about the early bird getting the worm. Your boss is still mad.

Your best friend spent the night at your house and you both snuck out to meet some friends. Your parents were waiting up when you got home and were very upset. You say that you are sorry, but it was all your friend's idea to sneak out.

Your mom caught you in a lie about your grades. She comes into your room to talk about the seriousness of what you did and how you broke her trust. You keep playing a game on your phone, with your back turned towards her, and mumble, "sorry."

You heard that your friend is really upset with you but you don't really know why. You decide to post on Instagram a picture of you holding a sign that says "sorry" and making a goofy face. That will make her laugh and might get a lot of likes and reposts.

You backed into a car in the parking lot when you were leaving school. You don't see anyone around, but you leave a note apologizing for the damage and leaving your insurance and contact information.

You forgot that it was your grandma's birthday yesterday and you feel really bad. You surprise her the next day with her favorite flowers and a gift. You apologize for forgetting her birthday and promise not to do that again!

You forgot to tell your mom that you volunteered to bring cupcakes to the concert tonight, until you were on your way to school. You say, "I'm so sorry mom!" Then you offer to give her some of your babysitting money if she will pick up some cupcakes at the grocery store today.

You admitted that you were spreading rumors that you knew were untrue about a teacher. You stood up and looked at the teacher, the principal and your parents in the meeting and said, "I am truly, truly sorry for what I did and I take full responsibility." You then accepted your punishment without complaining.

